World Maritime University in Malmö, Sweden is a UN-institution training people in particular from developing countries for responsible tasks in the shipping and ports area. 300 students have graduated after two years of study and 200 are presently studying in Malmö. All remain there for two years and receive a Master of Science Degree in seven different branches of study provided they make it. These students represent 97 different nationalities - no it is not a misprint, they do represent 97 different nationalities - and 10 of those at present in Malmö are women.

Ms. Dwynette Eversley from Trinidad and Tobago is studying General Maritime Administration and will graduate in December this year. She will go back then to make herself useful to that beautiful island country of hers and she has told me that she has appreciated a lot what she learnt at Stena.

Her major interest for the important field trips and on-the-job training which all students get is cruizing and ferry operations and where could she better study efficient ferry trading than at Stena Line in Gothenburg?

It all went very well and I think Stena can count on having made friends with a lady who will no doubt become an important shipping adviser to her ambitious and hard working country.

Dagens ros vill vi överraka till Stena Line som bjöd oss på bröllopschampagne 16/4. Det var en trevlig överraskning.
